HISTORY MADE BY FOISON.

Sixteen Chinese emperors are reported to have died by poison.

Poisoning is believed to be very common at the present day in Turkey and Persia. Two historians say that Alexander the Great died from a dose of poison in his wine. The names of seventeen Roman emperors of the West and twenty-two emperors of the East are preserved who are supposed to have died at the hands of the secret poisoner.

For nearly twenty years Hannibal, anticipating defeat and capture, carried poison concealed in a finger ring. He finally took it to avoid falling into the hands of the Romans.

Just before his first abdication Napoleon attempted his own life by poison. He was found unconscious, but by skillful treatment from the doctors he was revived and restored.

During a large part of the seven years' war Frederick the Great carried an ounce of corrosive sublimate in his pocket to use in case of hopeless disaster. On one or two occasions he came near swallowing it.

Mahomet was always on his guard against poison, but in spite of all his precautions he was once poisoned by a Jewish mistress, Zainab. She administered the poison in a leg of mutton and, although it did not kill the prophet, he for many years suffered from its effects.

After the death of James I. of England, the populace took the notion that he had been poisoned by a jealous woman at the instigation of Villiers. A quack doctor named Lamb was suspected of having furnished the fatal dose, and was literally torn to pieces by a mob in Cheapside in broad daylight before the police could interfere.

In 1648 Henry, Duke of Guise, wished to get rid of an enemy named Annee. He offered a soldier a rich reward if he would lie in wait and stab Annee in the back. With horror the soldier refused. That would be assassination, and he was a soldier, not an assassin. A compromise was effected. He was willing to take the money and have Annee poisoned, but not to assassinate him. The money was paid and Annee was poisoned.

A United States Consul at Sydney Talks.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—Consul Raps, reporting from Sydney, N. S. W., says: "I am decidedly of the opinion that in order to build up the extensive and valuable trade with the colonies of Australasia, a trade that by all the laws of commerce, convenience and geographical position belongs to the United States, swifter and more frequent steam communication must be established, say by vessels that leave here every two weeks and make the trip in eighteen days.

"Such a line would not be a paying investment at first without assistance from the government, but as connections are established trade develops, and the tourist and business travel diverted to it, would, I am convinced, yield satisfactory returns and become the most important factor in the establishment of relations of the utmost value to our manufacturers and producers."
